Terminal Bullet Performance

That is a pretty interesting bullet guys. Great work Sam!! I can hardly wait to see how it works out. This would truly be a "system" bullet with the Talon Tips.

Sam that is awesome...add the Talon Tips and it would truly be a system bullet!

Edit added: If this goes commercial I recommend that the narrow bands that Dan uses on his FBH bullets be used... And set the top band at each end at the upper location used for the lever action bullets. That way there are plenty of bullet seating depth options for the various cartridges.

You could have a tipped in the chamber, a hollow point and a solid in the magazine all with the same load and same bullet. What should this be called? BBW #13 hollow/flat switch point?

I like your points here about the bands. As long as it chambers well. If Michael is up for the testing we can play with the band design but the performance should be about the same. Great input 🙌

It looks like the 4 band should work well. Crimp on the top canalure on either tip and have three bands for neck tension. There should be enough bullet lead in any chamber for that to work. I see the 5 skinny band design Idea being excellent as well. Maybe angled top bands like the shark fin band design.

Boom Stick,

Isn't a tipped bullet a hollow point bullet with a tip? The tip extends the range but the bullet turns into a hollow point upon impact.

If so, a tipped in the chamber with solids in the magazine would seem to me to be the DG set up?

does one shoot through the grass or go for a between the eyes?

maybe depends on being there. If close enough to see the quality of grass, a between the eyes is probably good.

I thought so too, but to me, they all look good enough, at least to shoot! HEH..... Problem is, I already shot my two bulls when we saw this one, or I would have shot him too! But they tell me I must save some buffalo for you guys as well, being the fine, upstanding chap I am, I relented to not shoot. But I wanted to bad, if for no other reason than he was standing there too long! I tell you, it took self control!

Biebs

Will it ever end?

Tanz

I might have to bust through that grass, I don't think it looks too bad. I can't actually recall. But also depends on where you are standing as well, how far in front the grass is. If I were standing to the left more I would have more concerns, standing a bit to the right, it's hammer time! LOL..... Standing straight up in front, I might go for the top of that grass that is laying horizontal across to the right, and be sure to follow up quick!

Just as long as a grey twig is not sticking up where the grass has a horizontal lay. Two years ago when sighting in my 416 I had a perfect 'sideways' keyhole spin off a few inches from what I hadn't seen. That was a very sobering memory and I try to learn and bring those things to the split-moment decision that makes hunting a growing, learning experience. I've shot through more than my share of grass in the past on non-dangerous game and we grow cautious as we grow wise.

But yes, the grass does look just like grass and the horizontal lay between the nose and bottom of its left horn would be a natural sighting spot.

Michael,

I know you like NorthForks too and I recently whacked an Albino Scimitar-Horned Oryx with a 250gr NFSS in my 375H&H. Maybe I should have shot it in the ass, then I might have recovered the bullet! Picture and hunt report in American Big Game Hunting forum. I have a bunch of BBW#13 .375 loaded waiting for a range date. I used the densest powder suitable so I could "hop-it-up" a little. Full report in American Big Game Hunting forum.

Don't let the fence fool you. This was by no stretch of the imagination a canned hunt. That is a 5ft fence and these critters go under them not over them.

Thanks Eskay! Jim, No air con yet on the range or Lab#2. Figured everything out, start installation Monday Morning! Air Con, next week! Get more use next year looks like, not as hot as it has been, low 90s now!

Speaking of weather, storm has moved on past us here, just getting the backside now, little wind and rain, not much of that. 12 noon today, it will be done in my part of the world. Still dark here, can't really see, but don't think there is much more than a few limbs off the trees here. Nothing much to worry with. I think our neighbors up in NC are getting ready to catch some however! Good luck up there!

Andy well done! Nice looking critter! Hey, next time try to get the marks off the neck where the collar was! ☺ HEH HEH.....

No man, just kidding! I tell all my guys, have them tied up so we can quickly get the hunting part over with so we can fall in on the beer! HEH HEH HEH.....

Hey, you ain't no small boy there I see! Not even sure why you have a rifle, just grab hold of them and choke'em down!

Very good, thanks for bringing it down. Will check your report out upstairs.

Michael

Storm passing us now and I'm on the backside. Had about 4 inches of rain which I needed and not too much wind damage. Nice hurricane! Could have been a lot worse.
